

James Corones Award in Leadership, Community Building and Communication

NOMINATION FORM

This annual award recognizes a mid-career scientist or engineer (having earned his/her Ph.D. within the past 10 to 20 years) who is making impactful contributions to their field and the community at large through leadership, community building and communication. The recipient will be someone who encourages and mentors young people to be active in the science community, to communicate their work effectively, and to make a difference in their scientific area. For more information, please visit <https://www.krellinst.org/about-krell/corones-award>.

NOMINATOR

To start the nomination process, please fill out this form in its entirety, and, under separate cover, write a letter that speaks to the nominee's activities, accomplishments and character specific to the aims of this award and the aspirations of its namesake, James Corones.

Submit this form, your nomination letter and the nominee's CV to the Krell Institute by December 31, 2023 (corones-award@krellinst.org). Krell staff will then follow up with the three additional references you name in order to secure their letters prior to the February 16 close of the nomination process. All complete submissions will be reviewed by an external committee who will determine the winner in April 2024.
